

Wolfgang & Becky Wendland

Wolfgang Wendland and his wife Becky heard about Tabor from a group of Mennonite brothers in Weaverland who had been meeting with him for accountability in attempting to become debt-free. His goal was to find a way and means to unload his consumer debt which had been accumulating through two moves and furnishing a home. He feared that bankruptcy would be the only solution.

But Wolfgang reports, “I learned through my meeting with Elaine that there is a better way than bankruptcy. Elaine was not only [our CCCS] counselor but became a friend, believing in us and praying for us. I learned that there is no easy way and that doing it right requires sacrifice and also longevity. No overnight solution. It was difficult at first to overcome my embarrassment, especially as I was pastoring at that time. The whole process included as well our children Alissa and Wolfgang II.

“We thank God for Tabor, Elaine, many brothers and sisters, friends, and even people unknown to us who have been standing with us not only through that but also through a number of physical challenges.”

Congratulations, Wolfgang and Becky Wendland, for honoring your obligations through great difficulty and overcoming your debt.
